Migration Pattern

SERENGETI MIGRATION MAP

1. DECEMBER – MARCH

The calving: An estimated 400,000 calves are born which can draw a staggering number of predators eager to prey on the vulnerable young.

2. APRIL

The trek north: Herds move slowly northwards to fresh grazing.

3. MAY – JUNE

The rut: May is the mating season but still the journey continues, some herds move west towards the Grumeti River, and this is the first point on the route where river crossings can be seen.

4. JULY – OCTOBER

River crossings: The river crossings usually start in July, but the timing all depends on the rains. Although never guaranteed, crossings can regularly be seen at the Mara and Talek rivers.

5. NOVEMBER

The trek south: When the rains begin in November, the herds usually cross back to the Serengeti from the Masai Mara and head back towards the now fertile southern Serengeti.

By the beginning of December, Ndutu starts seeing the herds return to calve, and the whole process begins again.
